The screenshot shows the Emerging America website. At the top, there is a navigation bar with a 'Translate' dropdown, links for 'Website Accessibility', 'Privacy', and 'Contact Us', and social media links for Twitter and Facebook. A search bar is located on the right. Below the navigation bar is the Emerging America logo. The main content area features the title 'Immigrant History through Primary Sources' and a breadcrumb trail: 'Home > Accessing Inquiry > Immigrant History through Primary Sources'. A 'Share This Page' button is visible. On the left, there is a sidebar menu with the following items: 'Overview', 'Universal Design', 'Disability History through Primary Sources', 'Immigrant History through Primary Sources' (highlighted), 'Model Lessons on Immigrant History', 'Know & Support Students', 'Inquiry Strategies', 'Engagement Strategies', and 'Assessment Strategies'. Below the sidebar, there is a section titled 'How can we help you?' with a 'CONTACT US' button. The main content area includes a photograph of a teacher and six children holding placards with names in both English and Chinese. The caption reads: 'Palumbo, F., photographer. (1964) Miss April Lou, teacher at PS 1, Manhattan, with six Chinese children, recent arrivals from Hong Kong and Formosa, who are holding up placards giving his or her Chinese name both in ideographs and in transliteration and the name to be entered upon the official school records / World Telegram & Sun photo by Fred Palumbo. New York, 1964. [Photograph] Retrieved from the Library of Congress, https://www.loc.gov/item/94512334/'. Below the photograph is the section title 'IMMIGRANT HISTORY THROUGH PRIMARY SOURCES' and a paragraph explaining the Emerging America - Accessing Inquiry approach. The text states: 'The Emerging America - Accessing Inquiry approach to making history and social studies accessible to all learners emphasizes the importance of showcasing the historical contributions of people with related challenges, including the challenge of being an immigrant. Students engage when they connect with history that reflects THEIR experiences. For English Learners, seeing the contributions of new immigrants to U.S. history, seeing how immigration has been both a dynamic force and a topic of public debate, and learning about individuals whose civic contributions were not diminished by the circumstance of being a new speaker of English are important motivators in the study of history. For all students, learning about the contributions of new immigrants to American history is valuable. In addition, recognition that early colonists were themselves immigrants to North America, seen as newcomers by indigenous people and the Native

Immigrant Stories: Why we came, and what we brought with us

1906 - 2020

In this lesson on the experiences and contributions of immigrants to the United States, elementary students explore the reasons why people have made life changes in moving to a new country, both earlier in history and recently. Using primary sources spanning 100 years, students generate questions and look for answers. Students also interview adults in their lives or at school about their own immigration stories. This lesson was developed by teacher Matt Howell for a second grade class, but could easily work for older students as well.

Using their interviews and other research including primary and secondary sources, students will seek to discover reasons why their own family, or another family or group (contemporary or historical), came to the U.S., what they brought with them, and how their community benefits from immigrant contributions. Students will have a chance to share what they learned with each other, and can share their reports with civic leaders (and/or with their families as guests at a presentation).

Designed to be accessible to English Learners at various levels, and adapted for use in a general classroom, this is an engaging project that allows students to develop skills in asking questions, planning research, and sharing their work and the stories of others in ways that develop the skills of active citizenship.

Immigration and Relocation in U.S. History

The history of the United States has always been shaped by peoples and communities who came to its shores or moved within its borders. Some sought a better life, some fled oppression, and some were moved against their will. This presentation uses Library of Congress primary sources to explore moments and experiences from several of these communities.

Mexican

Millions of people in the United States today identify themselves as Mexican immigrants or Mexican Americans, and are among both the oldest and newest inhabitants of the nation. Some Mexicans were already living in the Southern and Western regions of the North American continent centuries before the United States existed. Many more Mexicans came to the country during the 20th century, and Mexican immigrants continued to arrive in the late 20th and early 21st centuries.

The multicultural inheritance of Mexican Americans is rich and complex. It reflects the influences of Spain, Mexico, and indigenous cultures, and has been shaped by hundreds of years of survival and adaptation in the crucible of North American history. This history was also shaped by wars and depressions, by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden Purchase, and by shifting attitudes toward immigration.

Mexican immigration occupies a complex position in the U.S. legal system and in U.S. public opinion. Immigration law has swung back and forth throughout the 20th century, at times welcoming Mexican immigrants and at other times slamming the door shut on them. The public reception of this immigrant group has also been unpredictable; Mexican immigrants have been able to make a place for themselves in communities across the United States, but frequently have had to battle hostile elements in those same communities to survive.

Mexican immigrants and their descendants now make up a significant portion of the U.S. population and have become one of the most influential social and cultural groups in the country. Mexican American culture will likely continue to shape U.S. life in language, politics, food, and daily living and will help define the nation's identity for a new century.

School Desegregation and Civil Rights: Orange County, CA

1. In 1944, Gonzalo and Felicitia Mendez tried to enroll their children in the Main Street School, Orange County California. The Mendez children were assigned to Hoover Elementary School, which was established for Mexican children. With the help of the United Latin American Citizens (LUCAC), several Latino families joined with the Mendez family to sue four local school districts, including Westminster, for segregating their children and 5,000 others.
2. At the state trial, Orange County superintendents used stereotypical imagery of Mexicans to explain the basis of school policy. One official declared, "Mexicans are inferior in personal hygiene, ability, and in their economic outlook." He further stated that their lack of English prevented them from learning Mother Goose rhymes and that they had hygiene deficiencies, like lice, impetigo, tuberculosis, and generally dirty hands, neck, face and ears. These he stated warranted separation.
3. The attorney for Mendez, David Marcus, called in expert social scientists as witnesses to address the stereotypes. He also challenged, based on the 14th Amendment, the constitutionality of education segregation. Fourteen-year-old Carol Torres took the stand to counter claims that Mexican children do not speak English. Felicitia Mendez also gave testimony about her children's experiences.
4. Judge Paul McCormick ruled in favor of the Mendez family. He stated, "I tell our children they are Americans."

These he stated warranted separation.

Key Takeaway

Judge Paul McCormick ruled that there was no justification in the laws of California to segregate Mexican children ... doing so was a "clear denial of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment" to the U.S. Constitution ... The case shows that the civil rights struggle crossed regional, racial and ethnic lines. Supporting briefs in the case included the NAACP (coauthored by Thurgood Marshall) and several other civil rights organizations...

In 1954, in Brown v. Board of Education, the Supreme Court ruled (in part based on the Mendez case) against “separate but equal” school nationwide.

IMMIGRANT HISTORY THROUGH PRIMARY SOURCES

The Emerging America – Accessing Inquiry approach to making history and social studies accessible to all learners emphasizes the importance of showcasing the historical contributions of people with related challenges, including the challenge of being an immigrant.

Students engage when they connect with history that reflects THEIR experiences. For English Learners, seeing the contributions of new immigrants to U.S. history, seeing how immigration has been both a dynamic force and a topic of public debate, and learning about individuals whose civic contributions were not diminished by the circumstance of being a new speaker of English are important motivators in the study of history.
